JUDGE WAS INDIGNANT.

And Just Because Mr. Solomon, a London Haberdasher, Believed in Advertising.

When the defendant appeared the magistrate, reports London Tit-Bits, he said:

"Prisoner, you are charged with having climbed up the statue of the duke of Wellington, put a pair of braces over his shoulders, and a placard calling attention to your establishment, where similar ones may be purchased." "Well, sir," replied the offender, with an ingratiating smile, "of gorse, 1 vants to get along in peesness." "After which," continued the mag-

"You also," continued the magistrate, consulting the indictment, "obstructed the thoroughfares and created a disturbance by placing a paper collar and a top-hat on the statue in question. Not only that," went on the magistrate, "but you endeavored to put on a coat and vest, with a placard: 'Go to Solomons', and get them as worn by the duke of Wellington for 18s. 6d.' Now, this is most improper and reprehensible."

"Dot's right, sir," said Mr. Solomons, delightedly. "Pitch into me, ef you blease. Spheak loudt, so dose noossmiled benignantly upon the report-promised to keep the next piece for the professor.

Several weeks later no trichinous meat having arrived at the laboratory, the professor became impatient, and called at the butcher's store to learn the cause of the delay.

The clerk, so reports the Chicago Tribune, at once said that such a piece of meat had been found a few weeks

"Didn't I ask you to keep it for me?" angrily inquired the disappointed professor. "What did you do with it?" "Why, we saved it for you as we promised," answered the puzzled clerk. "Well, where is it?"

"We sent it down to your house two weeks ago with the other meat."

It Proved Stronger Than Devotion to Her Church.

The Romance of a Nun Who Formed an Attachment for a Grocery Clerk and Finally Became His Wife.

Living in Utica, N. Y., is a happy wife who was a nun for 20 years of her life, when she was known as Sister Rita. She is now Mrs. Patrick Keating, and her husband is in very humble circumstances, earning the money to support them with the labor of his hands.

Love proved stronger than her training and her education; stronger than her devotion to the church; stronger

As a child, says the New York World, her thoughts had turned toward the church. When she was in Nazareth convent, in Rochester, she determined to take the veil, to devote her whole life to the simple, self-sacrificing work of a sister of charity. She was 17 when she was graduated, and took the vows at once.

As the years went on and Sister Rita was admitted to full membership in the religious order no suggestion of regret entered her pure mind. She felt that she possessed something far better than the pleasures of the world. She was happy in her close communion with the church, in the simple, austere life, in the work expected of her. In the course of duty she was assigned to the Roman Catholic Orphan asylum at Auburn, which is under the care of the Sisters of St. Joseph, and for 17 years she helped care for the little children. She looked forward with happy content to being buried at the end of a long life which she knew was useful in the black garb of a nun. It was long after Sister Rita was made housekeeper of the institution that the change came over her, and it

Keating is tall and strong and good to look upon. He breathed the atmosphere of freedom. Everything about him suggested a broad, untrammeled life to the cloister-bred sister. He fell in love with the sweet-faced Sister Rita, and the obstacles only increased the strength of his passion. Yet it was a matter of slow growth, and true friendship. It takes courage for a good Catholic to ask a blackrobed sister to become his wife. Sister Rita was shocked, but Keating was a persistent wooer. He made her admit that she loved him, but she declared that in doing so she was guilty of grave sin. She could never marry him because of the solemn vows she had taken.

She was 37, and as innocent of lovemaking as a child of ten. The thought that she would ever love a man and want to marry him had not even been considered as a possibility. Keating ing was 30, yet in everything save years he was far older than she. The lover and the woman won the victory over the nun. Sister Rita finally agreed to marry Keating, if the church authorities gave their consent. About six months ago she sought Father Lynch, her spiritual adviser, and told him the whole truth: He consulted with Rev. Father James J. Hickey, rector of the Holy Family church in Auburn, and the matter was laid before Bishop McQuade, of the Rochester diocese Bishop McQuade made careful investigation and decided to release Sister Rita from her vows and to sanction her marriage with Keating. She put away the black garb, and for the first time in more than 20 years wore a gown of a woman of the world.

They were quietly married in Utica and went to Auburn to live, making a home on Mechanic street. But the Catholic people of the city resented the apostasy of Sister Rita, and the couple came to Utica, where they are now living.
